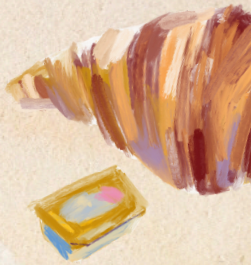
The Women & Children's Regenerative Living Initiative



Breaking the cycle of homelessness through regenerative living.

Homelessness is a complex issue, we believe that with targeted intervention, we can disrupt the cycle.

The Regenerative Farm Initiative is a one-year pilot program led by Trinity Rescue Mission in partnership with The Farm at Okefenokee, designed to provide holistic education for children, create life-giving job opportunities for women and single mothers, and produce nutritious food to feed the homeless of Jacksonville, Florida.

Three Pillars of Change

Holistic Education for Children

Investing in the future by providing children with the education they need to break the generational cycle of unhealth. We believe that education can enable children to thrive and live an abundant life.

Access to Nutrient-Rich Food

Providing access to healthy, regenerative food to individuals who can't afford basic nutritional necessities. Aiming to feed approximately 185,102 healthy meals this year alone.

Jobs for Women and Single Mothers

Creating life giving jobs for women and single mothers in a safe environment where they can disconnect from the normal chaos they are used to and step into stability, mentorship, and structure. Through training at Okefenokee Farm's established farm-to-table model, the fruit of their labor becomes regenerative food that helps feed guests at Trinity Rescue Mission in downtown Jacksonville.

The Unique Model:

This initiative is designed so that the jobs created for women directly produce food that feeds the tables at Trinity Rescue Mission. This win-win approach allows the women to tangibly see the work they are doing matters all while creating a safe environment to grow and develop life long skills. In addition to the work the women are doing, children will have access to farm education that goes beyond classroom learning, but through various outlets, teaches principles that help instill long-term sustainable growth.
